CONTESTANTS IN THE BIG DRIVE MAKING THE MOST OF REMAINING DAYS

Free Voting Coupon discontinued.—Coupons must be in this office Saturday night, January 13th.—Vote certificates to be in on Saturday, January 20th.—Three judges to handle close of campaign, and award prizes.

Last Week of the Prize Ballot Votes

Offer closes Saturday night, January 13th.—Few subscriptions will win big ballots.—Don't hold subscriptions over Saturday night, as votes will be lost if you do.—100,000 votes extra for new subscriptions.—Last part of week devoted to "second paid" subscriptions.—Contestants not winning prizes secure a cash award.—Make every remaining minute of the drive count.

The many workers in The Express Circulation Drive are making the last days of the campaign busy ones, and as the close draws near the hardest efforts to secure payment of subscriptions is being made. The Free Voting Coupon that has been good for votes will not be published any more, and those that are out are good for votes up to Saturday night, February 13th. All coupons should be in the office by that time. Vote certificates that are being held by some contestants should be held until the last day of the drive, which is Saturday, January 20th.

Three judges will be appointed to check and count the vote at the close, and a locked and sealed ballot box will be placed in the office the last day of the drive, and all reserve votes are to be placed in same. The keys to the ballot box will be turned over to the judges before the close, and the final count will be made, and the awards given to those who have the greatest vote, according to the rules and regulations of the drive.

This week is the last week for Special and Prize Ballot Votes, the ballot closing there will be at 11 p.m. o'clock, January 13th. From all indications at this time a comparatively few subscriptions will win the $6,000 prize ballot, besides all the other prize ballots. The last big opportunity is offered this week to secure the greatest vote.

The first four days of the last week will be devoted to securing new subscriptions by the contestants, who will be given a quote for each active worker, and a 100,000 extra votes will be given for each new one year subscription paid during the four days, besides the regular vote and the 100,000 extra votes will apply on every new one year subscription that has been turned in during the campaign by each individual contestant since opening day. Each worker to receive the extra votes for the new subscriptions that she may have turned in if their quota for the four days is secured. The quota will be very small, perhaps one or more subscriptions.

Do not hold back new subscriptions this week, thinking they will count more for the next week, for they count just the same this week, besides getting the regular and special vote for this week's offer, and the chance at the fifteen prize ballots.

The last two days of the drive will be classed as "Second Paid" subscription days. A second paid subscription is one that has been paid for one or more years at some time during the drive, if paid again, will secure all the votes that the first paid one secured in any of the periods, and a 100,000 extra votes for each year. There will be no more offers made for votes in any way. Those who secure the greatest vote who are taking an active part in the drive at this time will be the winners of all the prizes, and those who do not win a prize, and have taken an active part in the drive up to the finish, and have secured one or more paid subscriptions, will receive a cash award. Make the last days of the drive the best ones.

MAYOR MacGREGOR'S ADDRESS

Napanee, January 8th, 1922.

Gentlemen :—

We are meeting here to-night to start the work for the Municipality of Napanee for the year 1923. We feel that we have the confidence of the ratepayers, since they have elected us by their vote. Let me urge you individually to interest yourselves in the work of the Council so that at the end of the year the people will feel that their confidence has not been misplaced.

The morning you were sworn into office and in a committee of the whole formed yourselves into several standing committees. Now you are ready for action. Many problems will arise during the year that will require careful consideration on all committees. The greatest weakness of Councils heretofore was the lack of committee meetings as was stated at the last nomination meeting. I would urge that the chairman of each committee see that a meeting of his committee often in consultation. It is advisable that each chairman study the work of his committee by reading up it is only thus that the business of the town will be properly handled. You will find work of great interest to yourselves in the Finance Committee.

In respect to the finances of the town I think you will find upon making a careful examination that we are really in a first class financial position. We have, it is true, a large indebtedness amounting to $306,000, which may be roughly divided as follows : $10,834 is the balance of the railway bonus debt, which is to be paid off, $50,000 is the balance of the legacy left over to us by reason of the fact that the original debentures were not retired as they should have been through a sinking fund. There is a small public school debenture of $1657.86, which is the balance of a $3500 issue. There are Waterworks debentures amounting to $116,218 and canal debenture of $12,499.15. These are taken care of entirely by the Public Utilities Commission and go through the Corporation books as cross entries. There is also the Dundas street paving debenture of $94,346, part of which is taken care of by the property owners as a Local Improvement and the balance is a general charge upon the rates. The balance of the debenture debt is for sewers and cement walks and while the amount is large we have the walks and the sewers to show for it. Part, of course, of this annual Local Improvement charge is payable by the general rates and the rest through the Local Improvement tax rolls. Speaking of sewers, it would appear that we have dollar for dollar in our Public Utilities and our permanent walks and sewers to show for the money represented by our outstanding bonds.

In respect to our indebtedness to the Province it appears to be a net amount due the bank of $15,149, from which we must deduct the arrears of taxes, $9504.94, leaving a debit balance of $5654.06. A further sum of $600 due by the County in respect to the Grand Trunk Subway would leave our net floating debt about $5000.

There is also about $7500 due the Bank of Montreal as temporary advances on account of Local Improvement walks and sewers which will be paid off. This debt will be taken care of by the issue of a small debenture after the rolls have been finally revised.

The County rate for last year was $14,288. Ten years ago it $4000, and two decades ago it was $2400, thus showing the increased amounts we are required to pay on account of County expenditures.

Similarly, you will note that the school rate last year was 15 mills on the dollar, in 1912 it was 8 mills and in 1902 7½ mills. Proper assessment rates, county rate and school rate are uncontrollable and in fact of the total money that was spent during 1922 only a small portion was controllable. The chief appropriations within the control of the Council are for Streets, Town Property and Sanitary Committees. Last year the Streets Committee spent over $10,000 and the Town Property Committee $3144.00. These items will have to be cut down to a minimum. Gentlemen, let us be moderate in curbing all unnecessary expenditure.

STREETS : I would draw the attention of the Streets Committee to the inestimable value of oil. Through the use of this product our streets are in the best shape they have been. I would urge that a full summarized report be made of all streets by the Committee in Council as a whole. Repairs to all and cavities should be filled as early as possible. The purchase of oil during the fall at the lowest possible figure and a study of the best way to apply the same on the streets should be considered and the supervisory must be exercised in this department.

FIRE, WATER AND LIGHT : It should be the duty of the committee to take a careful inventory of all the appliances in connection with this department and if any new supplies are necessary the purchase price should be carefully considered. You should have an inspection of the waterworks system, also the hydrants should be protected from freezing. Some one should be made responsible for the committee in charge of the municipal lighting.

TOWN PROPERTY : This committee should make an inspection of the Town Hall, Library and Disposal Works and report through the chairman the state of the property. The Disposal Works should be systematically inspected too, to prevent defective service. This is a valuable property and needs careful handling.

MARKET AND POLICE : I would recommend that you keep a careful watch on the town scales. I would urge the committee to consider whether it would be advisable to lease the market at at present or should some competent person be retained to collect tolls. The question of the morality of the town is of vital importance. I would urge this committee to do your duty in the matter of enforcing laws, and help make Napanee one of the best towns in the province of Ontario to live in. The power house, gas and sewer matters for your consideration. You should report to the Council whom you recommend for these positions.

PRINTING AND BY-LAWS : It will be your duty to investigate as to the printing of all By-laws and see that the same are all in operation. Economy in printing should be exercised and an estimate of each order should be made by the committee.

POOR AND SANITARY : The Board of Health is composed of the Medical Officer of Health, the Mayor and the third member who is appointed by this Council. You will kindly see that this appointment is not overlooked. It is your duty to see that the poor are not suffering for want of fuel or clothing. It is very important that your committee meet often in connection with this department and every case of need should be gone into thoroughly. It would be very helpful and of interest to your committee if you use the Chief of Police in connection with this department. His time is always at your service. Call him up and she will see that you receive all the information that you desire.

In conclusion I trust the matters to which I have drawn your attention as well as all other matters that may arise from time to time engage your earnest and prompt attention. Let our labors in and out of Council be in harmony. This is not a one man's job nor is the work of any committee solely to devolve on the chairman of that committee. We are all to be active and to work in peace and harmony for the best welfare of our town and for the greatest good of the greatest number of its citizens.

Yours faithfully,

A. MacGREGOR,
Mayor.

On motion the address was laid on the table for future reference.

The Chairman of the various committees addressed the council briefly in reference to the work to be undertaken by their committees.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

Parliament is summoned for January 31st and the decks are clearing for action on Parliament Hill. The Government, when it meets Parliament in its second session, will have a majority of two over the combined Opposition; a majority which seems likely to grow rather than to diminish.

On Friday December 29th, the Government passed the first anniversary of its career, and looked back upon a year of accomplishment and progress such as has fallen to the lot of few administrations in this country, during recent years at least. Sworn to office on December 29th of 1921, the administration found itself one year later without a change in either ministry or portfolios, every minister being in charge of the department which he took over upon joining the administration. After conditions of the last few years, when ministers themselves hardly knew which department they were administering, this comes as decided relief.

Many important measures have been carried out for the benefit of the Dominion, and as a result of these there has grown up a feeling of confidence among all classes of people, and a vastly improved condition of affairs both in home and foreign business. Consider, in this, that when the government took over the reins one year ago were far from satisfactory throughout the country. Business was poor and there was a great deal of pessimism abroad. To-day Canada stands out as one of the most prosperous countries in the world. The Canadian dollar is back to par, the Dominion is showing evidences of a greater prosperity, expenditures have been reduced and revenue increased, and after one year of Liberal administration the country is showing every sign of getting back to normal.

Trade conditions at home and abroad have improved, and the Government, seeing the need of wider markets to bring about a greater prosperity at home, has set out to secure those wider markets by negotiating trade treaties with France and Australia. These treaties have been completed, giving Canada access to the markets of those countries and treaties are in the course of negotiation with Italy and Belgium.

As a means of giving a wider market to the farmers and live stock breeders of the Dominion, the government has also secured removal of the embargo against Canadian store cattle entering Great Britain. By the agreement reached between the representatives of Canada and of the British Government, and subsequently implemented, the embargo is already lifted as far as non-breeding cattle are concerned, and only exists in the case of breeding types of Canadian cattle until the Act has been tabled in the British Parliament for three weeks after the session in London resumes.

The efforts of the King government in regard to the tariff have resulted in the opening of a valuable market for Canada if the Canadian live stock exporters are willing and able to take advantage of it. Canadian cattle find a ready market in Great Britain, but of course there is need for study of the market by the exporters here.

Other accomplishments of the Government have included the signing of treaties with the United States governing disarmament on the Great Lakes and the regulation of the Lake of the Woods international levels. These two questions have been of considerable importance on both sides of the line for many years, but it remained for the King administration to dispose of them in a satisfactory manner.

To Hon. Charles Murphy, Postmaster General, must be given credit for the negotiation and signing of a postal convention between Canada and the United States which is expected to have a great effect in the prevention of deficiency in the handling international mail. The convention, which came into effect on January 1st, was the outcome of a conference arranged by Hon. Mr. Murphy between officials of his department and those of the U. S. postal service at which the international mail traffic was thoroughly discussed and plans for its improvement worked out.

As a result of the greatly increased efficiency of the Post Office Department since it was taken over by Mr. Murphy, citizens of the Dominion will profit this year by its operation instead of being called upon to meet a deficit as has been the case in former years. This year the surplus of the department promises to be a million dollars.

Appointment of the present strong Board of Management of the Canadian National Railways and the securing of Sir Henry Thornton for the position of president and General Manager of the system was another accomplishment of the Government during the past year. That there would be criticism of the board by the government's political enemies was to have been expected, but while it is yet too early to prophesy what the open board may be able to accomplish in the way of efficient operation of the system, it is noticeable that in all parts of the country the announcement of the board's appointment was received with satisfaction, as the personnel of the members gave full indication that the government had had done its best to secure a board of business men, and turned the road over to them without any political strings attached. As a result there is a greater confidence among the people that the National Railways now have a chance such as they never before had to become a paying proposition instead of continually piling up deficits.

With the record of these and other accomplishments behind it in the one year of its existence as a government, the King administration has nothing to fear in meeting Parliament on January 31st. More has been done, quietly and unostentatiously for the benefit of all classes of Canadians during the last twelve months than was accomplished by any of the administrations in the past ten years, and because they had been allowed to work out their own programmes without a lot of pernicious interfering legislation, the people of Canada are getting over the unrest which was so noticeable a year ago.

Another Progressive has followed the lead of W. J. Hammel of Muskoka, and thrown in his lot with the King government. This time it is Joseph Binette, of Prescott, who, following the resignation of Mr. Hammel, and what he termed "the dissensions among the Progressives themselves," has announced that he will seek a seat with the Liberals when the session opens. This he believes to be in the best interests of his constituency and the country at large. Mr. Binnette's move across the floor gives the government a majority of two over the combined opposition, and every member crossing the floor to the government benches will add two more to that majority. So that in the House as well as in the country the government is gaining strength and has gained considerable in the first year of its existence as an administration.

The coming session will probably be a fairly strenuous one, with such measures as the Redistribution Bill, the Bank Act and the legislation arising out of the trade treaties to be disposed of. And, of course, in addition to those which are now in sight, there will be a number of matters which will arise during the course of the session which will give rise to interesting debate. The legislation carrying into effect the treaties with United States and for the removal of the cattle embargo will be placed before Parliament early in the session, it is anticipated, and these with other matters will serve to keep the legislators busy until the sumer sun begins to shine through the West windows of the Commons Chamber with such brilliance that it makes everyone concerned anxious to see the end of the session that they may enjoy a little more freedom.

AN EARLY BOOSTER.

Pierre Boucher de Grosbois Believed In Canada.

An early Canadian booster was honored the other day when a statue was unveiled at Quebec, representing Pierre Boucher de Grosbois et de Boucherville, one-time Governor of Three Rivers. This pioneer Boucher, who lived to the age of 97, was the ancestor of Senator de Boucherville, who died in 1915 at the age of 92, after a long career in Canadian politics, much of which was spent in the Senate.

The original Boucher was a Norman boy who quit the old world for the new at an early age, arriving in Quebec in 1635, and dying at Boucherville, near Montreal, in 1717. He lived through the exciting days of the Iroquois menace, when the habitants would never sow grain but husband left her in the morning for his work in the fields whether he would return. It was this menace which impressed Boucher most strongly, and he went to France in 1661 to lay the case of the colonies before even the great Louis XIV, himself. It was this mission which gave him the opportunity to press the claims of New France before high personages. Indeed, he wrote a small book on Canada, which he dedicated to the great Colbert, who was Finance Minister for Louis. He told Colbert that New France would no doubt go on increasing when the Minister had been more fully informed of the fertility and beauty of the new regions, and went on to say that Canada "really is worth peopling, and that it could easily receive the overflowings of the population of Old France, which is so rich in men and women that foreign kingdoms and their colonies are being peopled with them from day to day. Would it not be better that the king should keep his subjects for himself by causing them to pass over to New France, and that the French nation should become equally renowned in both worlds, in America and Europe?"

How like the language of to-day sounds the appeal of Boucher? It might have been written in the twentieth century in advocacy of the unity of the British Empire.

Boucher, who afterwards became Governor of Three Rivers, and was the first Canadian to be ennobled by the French king, was sagacious in his appeal. He drew a fine picture of the natural resources of the St. Lawrence Valley in lands, forests and fur-bearing animals. Then he said: "In a word, good people may live here very contentedly; but not bad people, because they are too closely looked after here; therefore I would not advise any such to come, because they might be expelled from the country; or, at least, compelled to leave it, as many have done already; and it is precisely those who most loudly decry the country not having found in it what they expected."

The Aurora Borealis.

Until electricity was discovered, the cause of the aurora borealis was unknown, and it was supposed to be of supernatural origin. Even to-day its exact composition or source is more or less of a mystery, but it is generally supposed that it is caused by the recomposition of positive and negative electricity. It exists only in the regions of the poles, although its light is seen to a moderate degree over the greater part of the earth.

Mosquitoes Like Beer.

It is the female mosquito which does the biting that so frets and distresses humanity, the male members of the mosquito family being lazy and indolent, and not supposed to bite at all, although they sip at water or other liquid and appear especially fond of beer and wine.

THE FARM WOOD LOT

(Experimental Farm Notes)

According to the 1910 census the value of forest products produced on the farms of the United States, east of the Great Plains, was close to $200,000,000. In 1918, over 100,000,000 cords of wood were burned on American farms, or sold off the farms to town and city dwellers. Throughout Eastern Canada the value of forest products sold on the average farm is probably greater than in the United States.

Except in the more thickly settled sections of the country lucrative employment is found for farm labor and teams during the winter months cutting and hauling logs, ties, pulpwood, pit timber and cordwood. Even in the thickly populated portions of the Eastern townships of Quebec where the farms have been cultivated for well over one hundred years, it is quite common for farmers to handle from 100 to 200 cords of firewood in a season. This year stove and furnace wood is selling for from $10.00 to $14 per cord. This will give an idea of the important part the farm wood lot plays in helping farmers through periods of depresion or financial difficulty.

In many sections considerable revenue is derived from the sale of maple sugar products.

Forest areas conserve moisture for springs and well, while live windbreaks, make the landscape more attractive and utilize land unit for cultivation. Every farm should have at least enough home grown timber to supply fuel, fence posts and lumber for repairs to farm buildings.

A little care given each year to fire protection, proper thinning and utilizing of the timber would nearly double the yield from the average woodlot. Instead of slashing half grown trees of the useful marketable varities for home requirements, if the less valuable varities, windfalls, and trees showing signs of insect damage and rot were used, the remaining trees would make more rapid growth.

Open spaces should be avoided as much as possible, because once a grass sod is formed the growth of the trees is checked. Tops should be lopped to ensure more rapid decay and to lessen the danger from fire. The main idea is to keep a blanket of leaves and weeds on the forest floor to hold moisture and encourage the growth of the young trees.

It is bad practice to allow sheep or cattle to pasture in the woodlot, because they destroy the young growth which should come on as soon as the heavier timber is removed.

Of the hardwood trees the hard or sugar maple is the most valuable. Besides supplying the sap for sugar making, the wood is valuable for fuel, the manufacture of agricultural implements, furniture, hardwood flooring and distilled products. Other valuable hardwoods are birch, beech, brown and white ash and elm. Basswood and poplar grow more quickly than other deciduous trees, and are useful for reforestation. Spruce, of the softwoods, is the most important wood, supplying the bulk of the timber and rough lumber for building purposes. Besides, it is useful for pulpwood and pit timber. Pine is not often found in farm woodlots, but it is useful for manufactured lumber. Fir and hemlock are used mainly for building lumber and pulpwood. Cedar makes the best shingles and is also used for telephone and telegraph poles, cross-ties and fence posts. Tamarack, although not a common wood, is very durable and is valuable for fence posts, ties, mine and crib work timbers.

Wherever there is plenty of moisture a second growth usually springs up where the heavy timber has been removed. Because of their rapid growth the spruces, firs and poplars often supplant the original hardwood forests. Fairly good trees an acre of soft woods will grow at the rate of one to two cords per year, while hardwoods grow at the rate of one-half to one cord per year, a cord being equal to about 500 board feet of saw lumber. By proper management rocky, waste or swampy land, if allowed to grow up under forest may be made to yield a worth while income.

STAMPING OUT TUBERCULOSIS AT ITS SOURCE.

The Disease in Cattle to be Eradicated from Certain Districts.

The Dominion Department of Agriculture has taken a further step towards the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle. By an Order-in-Council of December 1st, eradication by prescribed districts will be undertaken by the Health of Animals Branch. The department is prepared to apply quarantine to restricted areas on the request of a provincial government, and to test cattle for the disease. The quarantine will be applied, insofar as bovine tuberculosis is concerned, under such conditions as will prevent contact with cattle from outside. Owners of the cattle within the area will be required to assist the veterinary inspectors by collecting the cattle when required and by giving such help as may be reasonably demanded. Testings will be performed by accredited veterinarians and will be completed as rapidly as possible. Compensation up to two-thirds of the appraised value will be paid for such reactors as are destroyed. Provision is made for saving for breeding purposes valuable animals that react to the test. These, if the owner desires, may be segregated under what is known as the "Hang System," this being virtually a quarantine from which only the newly born calves may be saved and returned to the healthy herd.

NORTH CANADA GOLD MINES SYNDICATE

Are offering now an investment that is sound and very attractive and each investor becomes the owner pro rata of a mine already showing gold values in excess of other paying mines in the gold districts of Ontario.

For every $25.00 certificate in the Syndicate the investor will receive 500 shares of the par value of $100 each in the company that the Syndicate is soon to incorporate.

The Syndicate is purchasing outright from the Anglo-Canadian Gold Estates, Limited, through the Bank of Montreal, at Port Arthur, 5 claims which have been prospected and which show great values in gold. On claims 174-172, which contains 360 acres of gold bearing quartz, is a mine that is now down 280 feet and showing values from $40.00 to $50.00 to the ton.

As there is no speculation in the taking over of these claims and as thousands of tons of gold bearing quartz is now already blocked out and as the mine is there fully equipped for extensive mining, the Syndicate expects general subscriptions to it's ranks for the investments bid fair to repay many fold.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR SEED CORN.

(Experimental Farms Note).

With the advent of the cold, frosty days of November and December begins the danger period as far as climate is concerned for stored corn that is to be used for seed purposes.

In the areas that we consider the seed corn growing section of the country there is less danger of damp or insufficiently ripened corn being stored. Even in these more favored areas, however, damp, fall weather or improper methods of storing frequently means poor vitality in the seed crop thus handled. This low vitality of seed corn offered for sale each spring is reflected in decreased yields because of poor stands of corn.

Each year good seed corn is scarce. The truth of this statement is not commonly appreciated because many do not realize the serious loss to themselves and the country as a whole by planting inferior seed. It is true that a full stand may be obtained by planting seed of poor germinating qualities but the yield will be lower than good seed would have produced.

A great deal of the very best seed is available at ripening time. The problem is then to keep the corn from harvesting time until planting time the following spring in such a manner that it will retain its full productivity. One of the main considerations in this connection is keeping the corn thoroughly dry. If the drying has been done immediately after harvesting so much the better. Artificial heat is not necessary in drying unless the harvesting weather has been very damp.

A cheap and satisfactory method of storing seed corn for the winter is by using chicken wire or a mesh which will accomodate the cobs of the particular variety of corn being stored. This wire may be nailed perpendicularly to scantlings in a dry room or out building, and it will be found that by the use of such wire a great deal of corn may be stored in a comparatively small space.

Corn intended for seed purposes should not go into the winter with more than 10 to 12 per cent of moisture unless it is kept in a heated room during the season of severe frosts.

Before the real severe winter weather arrives it would be well worth while to examine your seed corn supply to see if it is perfectly dry. If it is not it would pay well to remove at least enough to a heated room to supply the grower's own needs, if it is impossible to dry the whole amount. Careful thorough drying immediately after harvest time to a moisture content of 10 to 12 per cent, and the use of a storage method that keeps the individual ears in a well ventilated and dry condition is the secret of producing seed corn that will give satisfaction as far as vitality is concerned.

Hugh Guthrie Likes Books

When one studies the characteristics of some of the nation's most distinguished public men, one often wishes that it were possible to take a trait of one and add it unto another, then repay the first by giving him some quality too generously represented in the second.

During one of the long weary evening sessions toward the end of the last session of Parliament, the Hon. Hugh Guthrie, M.P., of Guelph, was reading a volume of the Life of Marie Antoinette. Mr. Guthrie's leader—the Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, who sits immediately across the aisle—looked over and took judicial notice of the title of the tome in his lieutenant's hand. "Last night you were reading a bound volume of Punch;—to-night it is Marie Antoinette, for Heaven's sake why don't you read the Grain Act?" he expostulated.

There in a nutshell is the keynote —if keynotes are ever found in such a peculiar place. If Mr. Meighen could be induced to forsake his beloved Macauley once in a while and delve into old volumes of Punch, and Mr. Guthrie would occasionally desert the entrancing biographies he adores and make his really fine intellect wrestle with big problems, both men would approximate the perfect balance.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie has other claims to recognition aside from the one resting on the fact that he is the most omnivorous reader in the House of Commons. His handsome face and fine physique would make him an outstanding figure in any group of men. His former leader, the late Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, recognized this fact, for he frequently chose Mr. Guthrie to represent Canada at great Empire gatherings. He was one of the ten delegates appointed by the Federal Government to attend the coronation of King George V.

We are reaching the stage in the development of Canada where sons are proud to prepare themselves to succeed their fathers. Hugh Guthrie achieved the honor in 1900 after a hard fight and he has been putting up hard fights to retain it ever since. His father, Donald Guthrie, K.C., represented the same constituency in the Commons from 1872 till 1883, when he retired. Hugh Guthrie has confided to me the fact that his ambition is to hold the seat until his son is mature enough to contest it. That is the soundest kind of hereditary succession—where each generation must prove itself worthy of the honors earned by the one preceding.

Mr. Guthrie came to the Green Chamber as a Liberal, but he broke away from his leader and his party in 1917 on the Conscription Bill—being the first Liberal to cross the floor of the House. Hon. Mr. Pardee was second, and the Hon. George Graham third.

The post of Solicitor-General was awarded to him in the Coalition Government. For three years he served in that capacity, and when Gen. Mewburn retired as Minister of Militia in 1920, Mr. Guthrie took over that portfolio and carried on until the defeat of the Meighen Government in December, 1921.

Another honor that came to Mr. Guthrie was being chosen to represent Canada at the International Financial Conference called by the League of Nations. For some time he was a member of the Imperial War Graves Commission, and has gone through the war zone several times.

After the United States came into the war, Mr. Guthrie toured the republic on a speaking tour with Madame Sarah Bernhardt and the French Ambassador.

Solicitor for the City of Guelph, the County of Wellington and the Bank of Montreal and member of Parliament though he be, those who know him longest and best feel that Hugh Guthrie never scratched the surface of his capabilities. He is one of those rare men who have been dowered by nature with an arresting personality, fine physique and intellect. So few have all three. But like the small boy he detests drumery and loves play, and he reads biography, and good novels, travels to interesting lands whenever the opportunity presents itself, and he sends one else act as the "greasy grind" we all knew in college. In other words some one else can have the glory if the Hon. Mr. Guthrie can enjoy the more pleasant things of life.

Saved a Mail Bag.

A modest home one lonely Gooseberry Island, off the coast of Newfoundland, spent a right merry Christmas. Wandering by the shore a young girl, Rachel Coomes by name, found a mail bag cast up by the sea. She had the good sense to communicate promptly with the post office authorities who immediately investigated. On examination the bag was found to furnish the one missing link in the chain of evidence of an ocean mail robbery that inspectors of the department have been vainly trying to piece together for months. Hon. Charles Murphy, Postmaster-General, telegraphed $100 to the girl with his best wishes for Christmas.

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY COAL BIN.

The furnace toils the knell of falling steam,
The coal supply is virtually done;
And at this price, indeed it does not seem
As though we could afford another ton.

Now fades the glossy cherished anthracite;
The radiators lose their temperature;
How ill avail on such a frosty night,
The "short and simple flannels of the poor."

Tho' in the ice box fresh and newly laid,
The rude forefathers of the omelet sleep,
No eggs for breakfast till the bill is paid,
We cannot cook again till coal is cheap.

Can morris chair or papier-machie bust
Revivify the falling pressure gauge?
Cheer up, the grand piano if you must
And burn the East Aurora parrot cage.

Fully many a can of purest kerosene,
The dark unfathomed tanks of Standard Oil
Shall furnish me, and with their aid, I mean
To bring my morning coffee to a boil.

FACE GRAVE PROBLEM

Turks Want to Abolish Foreign Consular Courts.

European Powers and the United States Will Protest Against Such Action, Which Promises to Be the Most Difficult Problem on the Agenda of the Lausanne Conference—Feeling In Near East Runs High.

LAUSANNE, Dec. 25.—One of the gravest items on the Near East conference agenda yet unsolved is the question of foreign consular courts in Turkey, which the Turks declare must be abolished, but the European nations, as well as the Americans, want these courts maintained.

A stirring altercation took place at a meeting of the sub-commission on minorities between the former Greek Premier, Venizelos, and the Turkish delegate, Riza Nur Bey. The dispute between the two arose over the question of responsibility for Greek deportations in Asia Minor, and was so violent that it became necessary to adjourn the session.

According to spokesmen of the Turkish delegation, Riza Nur Bey declared that the Greek army was not so much responsible for the recent military disaster as was Venizelos himself, because it was Venizelos who had inaugurated the idea of "a military invasion of Anatolia." Riza affirmed that in his opinion the Greek Ministers, who were recently executed at Athens were in all probability entirely innocent of deceiving the Greek people, because the real father of the Asia Minor campaign was Venizelos.

The Italian chairman of the sub-commission, Signor Montagna, had previously warned both the Turkish and Greek delegates that references to massacres and expulsions must henceforth be voided, but, the Turks alleged, Venizelos refused to obey this injunction. He delivered a bitter indictment against the Turkish army, and went so far the Turkish delegates assert, that the chairman was obliged repeatedly to call him to order.

After insistent attempts, Riza Nur Bey eventually got the floor and defended Turkey, and then made a personal attack on the former Greek Premier.

Another indication that feeling is running high between the Turks and the Greeks was found in a communique, which the Turkish delegation issued later declaring that repeat advices from Anzora prove that the Greeks are confiscating all the farms belonging to Moslems in Crete and that the Moslems in the hills, fearing massacre, have fled to the cities and are dying of hunger.

"Every day more than twenty Moslems are dying either through massacre or hunger," says the communique, "and Moslems generally are forbidden to leave Crete." The Turks also allege mistreatment of the Moslems in Mityiene.

Another complication in Near Eastern conditions was disclosed in a telegram dated December 19, which reached here Friday from Beirut. Foreign relief workers report that between December 9 and 16, 5,000 Armenian refugees, fleeing from Turkey had arrived at Aleppo, and 2,000 more were reported crossing the border into Syria the day the despatch was forwarded.

"All are in an appalling state of destitution, and nearly all of them were robbed," says the telegram. "The French are furnishing nousing and food. Clothing and food just came from Australia and were shipped to Aleppo. The French are feeding 1,350. The American Near East Relief is straining every resource."

Lord Curzon, M. Barrere and the Marquis Di Garroni held an important conference in an effort to straighten out the remaining difficulties over the Straits control. The Turks are insisting strongly that the International Commission shall have no jurisdiction over such matters as lighthouses and pilotage in the Straits, and especially shall have nothing to do with the demilitarization of the zones.

Strengthened by the United States view that a Straits control commission is needless, the Turks said they saw no real necessity for a commission, particularly as its powers would be so limited; yet they had accepted the idea of the commission, and would abide by their acceptance.

Explosion In House Furnace.

INGERSOLL, Ont., Dec. 26.—Two Dorchester children, Herbert Thornhill, aged 11 years, and little Jean Stewart, daughter of Rev. Donald Stewart, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in the village, were the victims of a severe accident Thursday when gas in the furnace in the Presbyterian church exploded. Following his usual duties, the lad lit the gas in the furnace and a short time later discovered that the flames had become extinguished. Without checking the flow of gas he again applied a match and there was an immediate explosion, both children being enveloped in the flames. One of the boy's hands was severely burned, as was also his face. Although her injuries are serious the girl's escape was more fortunate.

It is not thought the boy's eyesight has been affected, although the extent of his injuries are not known at the present time.

The "Killer" Whale.

The "killer" whale is the most ferocious animal, whether of sea or land, in the world, bar none.

The creature attains a length of twenty feet, and weighs about a ton. It is a predatory in the last degree, even attacking right whales and other whales of the largest species and tearing them literally to pieces. To hunt it in boats is perilous, for it does not hesitate to assail human beings.

Tremendously powerful, astonishingly swift, the killer whales usually travel in schools of a dozen or more, hunting by preference in packs, like wolves. They gobble great numbers of fur seal pups, when the latter are taking their first lessons in swimming in the waters about the Pribylof Islands, in Bering Sea.

The Eskimos believe that the killer whales are really metamorphosed wolves. When so inclined, they swim to the shore, climb out, and transform themselves into wolves. Or, contrariwise, the wolves come down to the sea, jump in, and become killer whales.

The average adult head has a circumference of twenty-two inches.

Useless Clearing.

Large stretches of land are being cleared to no purpose at all. Such land may never become useful for cultivation. These methods are also influencing bodies of water, permitting a decrease in source of supply and a consequent lessening of available energy. Until such time as these matters are taken up and definitely acted upon, it would seem that Canada will be faced each year with a steadily declining forest reserve upon which her industry may call at a future time. It is being urged more and more by people who have made intensive study of the question, that more definite steps be taken immediately towards forest conservation and repetition.

EASTERN ONTARIO DAIRYMEN MEET

Prominent dairymen and others interested in the cheese and butter industry were in attendance at the 46th annual convention of the Dairymen's Association of Eastern Ontario.

The first session was presided over by M. N. Empey, of Napanee, President of the association. His address to the members of the association was replete with information. In the course of his address the president stated that since the war there has been a decline in prices for dairy products, which was expected. In referring to the matter of dairy products, the speaker said that for several years Canada's total exports of dairy products to Great Britain have steadily declined. The exports from New Zealand have as steadily increased. In 1911 exports of cheese were 181,893,724 pounds ;; in 1921 they were 133,629,340 pounds. During the same periods the exports of cheese from New Zealand increased from 49,187,888 to 160,911,484 pounds. In other words, Canada's exports of cheese fell off 48,273,384 pounds, while the exports of New Zealand cheese increased 111,723,993 pounds. To-day Canada was no longer the leading exporter of cheese to Great Britain, that proud position having been taken by New Zealand. Improvement in quality, if possible, was what was needed to get and hold the Dominion's enviable reputation on the British market. The Standard Dairy Act Mr. Empey characterized as giving general satisfaction, and was no doubt here to stay.

During the afternoon a number of friends called to congratulate the couple and were served with refreshments.

Do You Believe in Spooks? Read This.

Almost from the moment the newlyweds take possession of their late Uncle Ebenezer's "jack o'lantern" house, strange happenings occur. Throughout the story of "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" there is a strong vein of mystery and superstition. A shadowy figure prowls about the halls at midnight and other supernatural happenings maintain the suspence and interest at high pitch every moment. This picture will be shown at the Strand Theatre on Friday and Saturday, January 12th and 13th. P. S.—Don't forget we have Smith's novelty orchestra on Saturday night. If you want to see a good show visit the Strand.

Don't Read This.

What is the best way to handle the female of the species? This is the question that has baffled the wits of most men. Steps up in the Winter Garden at Eden. Should he use cave man tactics? Should he treat her like a piece of bric-a-brac? Should he admire her, neglect her, lavish love and kisses upon her, ignore her, kill her with kindness, or "Handle with Care?" Here is a single angle on the marriage tangle, but not a triangle, just a happy arrangement. Beautiful Grace Darmond plays the lead in "Handle with Care," a merry, romantic, novelty ;; a sparkling gem of a motion picture written by Charles Belmont Davis—Wednesday and Thursday. If you've loved, now you'll laugh. It's a photoplay with a soothing touch for the married folks and joy for the single. Yes, laughter is guaranteed to either single or married. Come for a big laugh and bring your other half. See the answer at Strand Theatre on Wednesday and Thursday, January 10th and 11th.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

is greatly relieved by constitutional treatment. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced, your hearing may be destroyed forever. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system, thus reducing the inflammation and assisting Nature in restoring normal conditions.

DESERONTO.

Mrs. John Lloyd passed away at her home, six miles north of Deseronto, on Tuesday morning last, at 6 o'clock. The death of Mrs. Lloyd is the result of the tragedy that befell her a week ago when she was found by her son-in-law, Mr. Clem Taylor, prostrated and helpless on the floor of her living rom after having lain there in the cold for twenty-four hours following a stroke. The funeral took place at the farm residence on Thursday of last week at 2 o'clock and interment in the cemetery at Morven, where lies her husband who died some eleven years ago. Mr. Lloyd was 77 years of age at her death, and had lived alone on the farm since the death of her husband. Three children are left bereaved, Mrs. Ethel Taylor, who with her husband and children reside out from Napanee on the Belleville Road; Mrs. Edith Fortune, who resides with her family near Toronto; and Mr. Angus Lloyd, who resides in Manitoba. There are other relatives and friends who mourn the loss of a friend and a good-hard-working woman. The barns of Alex Therrien, John Marrigan, A. S. Asselstine and John Fletcher, situated between Mill and Green streets at the south end, were totally destroyed by fire early on Saturday morning. It was 1.15 a.m. when the fire whistle blew calling out the fire brigade and fire fighting machinery. The barns being of wood and containing a quantity of hay and straw, the flames made quick work of destruction in a very spectacular manner. There being no wind to speak of alone saved further destruction. The cause of the fire is absolutely unknown and no one seems to venture even a probable cause. It is mysterious the same as the High School fire of recent date. The barn of Mr. Marrigan appears to be the starting point of the terrible blaze, and, while it was burning, the Therrien, Asselstine and Fletcher managed to get out of their barns their automobiles, trucks, wagons and sleds before the buildings were enveloped by the flames, and their losses are confined to the buildings together with quantities of hay, grain, straw and about 3000 feet of lumber that was stored in the Asselstine barn. Mr. Marrigan's loss is Mr. Marrigan's barn was complete, except that a cuter was saved. His horse, pig, chickens, geese, sheep, harness, buggy, etc., were all consumed. Mr. Asselstine also lost eight turkeys.

At the regular meeting of the Deseronto and District Returned Men's Club in their club rooms over Malley's drug store on Friday night the following officers were elected to serve for the year of 1923 resulted as follows: President, Comrade Clare Malley; vice-pres., Comrade Asselstine; secretary, Comrade Wm. H. Thompson; treasurer, Comrade Victor O. Pearce; executive committee, Comrades George Hoppings, Harry Storey and Robert Childs. The club anticipates putting on a series of entertaining dancing parties at the Women's Citizen's League hall on Mill street soon, and other lines of entertainment in the hands of the general committee for development. The next regular meeting of the club will be held on the 16th of the first Thursday in February.

The late Wm. Parry, whose body was laid away in the vault of the Deseronto cemetery Friday, was a member of the local orders of the Sons of England and I.O.L. After the funeral service, which was conducted by Rev. Mr. Bamforth, at the home on Dundas street, the remains were taken in charge by the Sons of England who conducted their regular burial service. The Orange order contributed flowers.

WEBSTER-MAN'S MAN

by Peter B. Kyne

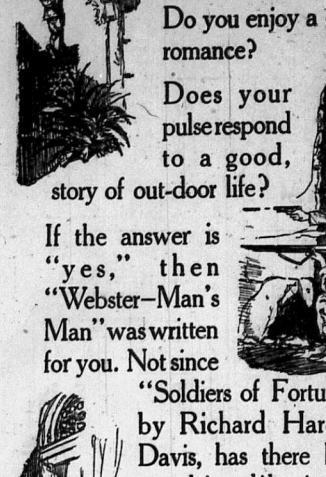
Does your eye answer to the drumbeat of adventure?

Do you enjoy a good romance?

Does your pulse respond to a good, story of out-door life?

If the answer is "yes," then "Webster-Man's Man" was written for you. Not since "Soldiers of Fortune," by Richard Harding Davis, has there been anything like it—or anything of the kind so good.

Will Be Printed Soon as a Serial in This Paper!



CHAPTER I.

When John Stuart Webster, mining engineer and kicker-up-of-dust on distant trails, flagged the S. P., L. A. & S. L. Limited at a blistered board station in Death Valley, California, he had definitely resolved to do certain things. To begin, he would invade the dining car at the first call to dinner and order approximately twenty dollars' worth of ham and eggs, which provender is, as all who know will certify, the pinnacle of epicurean delight to an old sour-dough coming out of the wilderness with a healthy bankroll and a healthier appetite.

Following the ham and eggs, Mr. Webster planned to saturate himself from soul to vermiform appendix with nicotine, which he purposed obtaining from tobacco with nicotine in it. It was a week since he had smoked anything with an odor even remotely like tobacco, for the August temperature in Death valley is no respecter of moisture in any man or his tobacco. Upon arrival in Salt Lake City his spree would really begin. Webster designed chartering a taxicab and proceeding forthwith to a hotel where he would engage a sunny room with a bath, fill the bathtub, climb blithely in and soak for two hours at least, for it was nearly eight months since he had had a regular bath and he purposed making the most of his opportunity. His longdrawn ablutions at length over, De would don a silken dressing gown and slippers, order up a barber and proceed to part with enough hair and whiskers to upholster an automobile, and upon the completion of his torsorial adventures he would encase his person in a suit of mauve-colored silk pajamas, climb into bed and stay there for forty eight hours, merely waking long enough to take another bath, order up periodical consignments of ham and eggs, and incidentally, make certain that a friendly side-winder or chuckwalla hadn't crawled under the blanket with him.

So much for John Stuart Webster's plans. Now for the gentleman himself. No one—not even the Pullman porter, shrewd judge of mankind that he was —could have discerned in the chrysalis that flagged the Limited the butterfly of fashion that was to be. As the ebony George raised the vestibule platform, opened the car door and looked out, he had no confidence in the lean, sun-baked big man standing by the train. Plainly the fellow was not a first-class passenger but a wandering prospector, for he was dog-dirty, a ruin of rags and hairy as a tarantula. The only clean thing about him was a heavy-calibered automatic pistol of the army type, swinging at his hip.

"Day conch an' tourist up in front," the knight of the whiskbroom announced in disapproving tones and started to close down the platform.

"So I perceived," John Stuart Webster replied blandly. "I also observed that you failed to employ the title 'sir' when addressing a white man. Put that platform back and hop out here with your little stool, you saddle-colored son of Senegambia, or I'll make you a hard porter to catch."

"Yassuh, yassuh!" the porter sputtered, and obeyed instantly. Mr. Webster handed him a disreputable-looking suitcase and stepped aboard in state, only to be informed that there wasn't a vacant first-class berth on the train.

"Yes, I know I'm dirty," the late arrival announced cheerfully, "but still, as Bobby Burns once remarked, 'a man's a man for a' that'—and I'm not unsanitary."

"I'm very sorry," the conductor replied perfunctorily and endeavored to pass on, but Webster secured a firm grip on his lapel and frustrated the escape.

"You're not sorry," the ragged wanderer declared, "not one little bit. You're only apprehensive. However, you needn't be. There is no wild life on me, brother, I assure you."

"But I tell you, the train is full up. You'll have to roost in the day coach or the tourist. I'm very sorry——"

"Nevertheless, despite your deep grief, something tells me you're spoofing, so while I must, of necessity, accept your suggestion, said acceptance will be but temporary. In about two hours, young fellow, you're going to make the alarming discovery that you have bats in your belfry." And with a whiskery grin which, under the circumstances, was charming in its absolute freedom from malice, Mr. Webster departed for the day coach.

Two hours later the conductor found him in the aforementioned day coach, engaged in a mild game of poker with a mule-skinner, a Chinaman, an aged prospector, and a half-breed Indian, and waited until Mr. Webster, on a bob-tailed flush, bluffed the Chinaman out of a dollar-and-a-half pot.

"Are you Mr. John S. Webster?"

"Your assumption that I am that person is so eminently correct that it would be a waste of time for me to dispute it." Webster replied quizzically. "However, just to prove that you're not the only clairvoyant on this train, I'm going to tell you something about yourself. In your pocket you have a telegram; it is from Chicago, wi ere your pay-check originates; it is short, sweet and comprehensive, containing an order which you are going to obey. It reads somewhat as follows:

"'My friend, John S. Webster, wires me from Blank that he boarded train at Blank and was refused first-class accommodation because he looked like a hobo. Give him the best you have in stock, if you have to throw somebody off the train to accommodate him.' Signed, 'Sweeney.'

"Do I hit the target?"

The conductor nodded. "You win, Mr. Webster," he admitted.

"Occasionally I lose, old timer. Well?"

"No offense, Mr. Webster, no offense. I can let you have a stateroom——"

"That's trading talk. I'll take it."

The conductor gave him his receipt and led him back to the stateroom in the observation car. At the door Webster handed him a five-dollar bill. "For you, son," he said gently, "just to take the sting out of what I'm about to tell you. Now that I possess your receipt and know that ten men and a boy cannot take it away from me, I'm going to tell you who Sweeney is."

"Who is he?" the conductor queried. Already he suspected he had been outgeneraled.

"Sweeney," said Mr. Webster, "is the chief clerk in one of Chicago's most pretentious hotels and a young man who can find all the tangles of a situation without working it out in logorithms. I wired him the details of my predicament; he heard the Macedonian cry and kicked in. Neat, is it not?"

The conductor grinned. "I hate to take your money," he declared.

"Don't. Just at present I'm very flush. Yes, sir, I'm as prosperous as a yearling burro up to his ears in alfalfa and the only use I have ever found for money is to make other people happy with it, thereby getting some enjoyment out of it myself. When I'm broke I'll make some more."

And Mr. Webster retired to his hardwon sanctuary, where he removed as much alkali and perspiration as he could, carded his long hair and whiskers, manicured his finger nails with a jack-knife, changed his shirt, provided five minutes of industry for George, with his whiskbroom and brush, and set himself patiently to await the first call to dinner.

Presently a pink-jowled, well curried, flashily dressed big man, of about Webster's age, passed in the corridor, going toward the head of the train. An instant later a woman's voice said very distinctly:

"I do not know you, sir; I do not wish to know you, and it is loathsome of you to persist in addressing me. If you do not stop your annoying attentions, I shall call the conductor."

"Ah! Beauty in distress," John Stuart Webster soliloquized. "I look so much like an Angora goat to her as well but in." He stepped to the door of his stateroom. A girl stood in the vestibule, confronting the man who had just passed Webster's door. Webster bowed.

"Madame, or mademoiselle, as the case may be," he said, "unlike this other male biped, my sole purpose in presuming to address you is to suggest that there is not the slightest necessity for taking this matter up with the conductor. I am here and very much at your service."

The girl turned—and John Stuart Webster's heart flopped twice in rapid succession, like a trout newly grassed. She was as lovely as a royal flush. Her starry glance began at his miner's boots, traveled up his old soiled whitecord trousers, over his light blue chambray shirt and found the man behind the whiskers. She favored Webster with a quick, curious scrutiny and a grave, sweet smile. "Thank you so much, sir," she answered, and passed down the corridor to the observation car.

"Well, old chap," Webster greeted the fellow who had been annoying her, "how about you? What do you think we ought to do about this little affair?"

"The sensible thing would be to do —nothing. You might start something you couldn't finish."

"That's a dare," Webster declared brightly, "and wasn't it the immortal Huckleberry Finn who remarked that anybody that'd take a dare would suck eggs and steal sheep?" He was silent a few seconds, appraising his man. "I suppose you commenced operations by moving into her section and asking if she would like to have the window open and enjoy the fresh air. She rebuffed you, but being a persistent devil, you followed her into the observation car, and in all probability you ogled her at luncheon and ruined her appetite. And just now, when you met her in this vestibule, you doubtless jostled her, begged her pardon and without waiting to be introduced asked her to have dinner with you this evening."

"Well?" the fellow echoed belligerently.

"It's all bad form. You shouldn't try to make a mash on a lady. I don't know who she is, of course, but she's not common and for the sake of the mother that bore me I always respect and protect a good woman and whale h—— out of those that do not."

He reached inside his stateroom and pressed the bell. The porter arrived on the run.

"George," said Mr. Webster, "in a few minutes we're due at Smithville. If my memory serves me aright, we stop five minutes for water and orders."

"Yassuh."

"Remain right here and let me off as soon as the train comes to a stop."

When the train slid to a grinding halt and the porter opened the car door, Webster pointed. "Out!" he said. "This is no nice place to pull off a scrap."

"See here, neighbor, I don't want to have any trouble with you——"

"I know it. All the same, you're going to have it—or come with me to that young lady and beg her pardon."

"All right, I'll apologize," and he started forward as if to pass Webster in the vestibule, on his way to the observation car, whither the subject of his annoying attention had gone. Two steps brought him within striking distance of his enemy, and before Webster could dodge, a sizzling right-hander blow landed on his jaw and set him back on his haunches in the vestibule.

It was almost a knockout—almost, but not quite. As Webster's body struck the floor the big automatic came out of the holster; swinging in a weak circle, it covered the other.

"That was a daisy," Webster mumbled. "If you move before my head clears, I'll put four bullets into you before you reach the corridor."

He waited about a minute, then with the gun he pointed to the car door and the masher stepped out. Webster handed the porter his gun and followed; two minutes later he returned, dragging his assailant by the collar. Up the steps he jerked the big battered hulk and tossed it in the corner of the vestibule, just as the girl came through the car, making for the diner up ahead.

Again she favored him with that calm, grave, yet vitally interested gaze, nodded appreciatively, made as if to pass on, changed her mind, and said

"You Are a Very Courtly Gentleman."

very gravely: "You are a very courtly gentleman, sir."

He bowed. There was nothing else to do, nothing that he could say under the circumstances. To use his chivalry as a wedge to open an acquaintance never occurred to him—but his whiskers did occur to him. Hastily he backed into his stateroom and closed the door, presently he rose and surveyed himself critically in the small mirror over the washstand.

"No, Johnny," he murmured, "we can't go into the diner now. We're too blamed disreputable. We were bad enough before that big swine hung the shanty on our right eye, but whatever our physical and personal feelings, far be it from us to parade our iridescent orb in public. Besides, one look at that queen is enough to do us for the remainder of our natural life, and a second look, minus a proper introduction, would only drive us into a suicide's grave." He sighed, rang for the porter and told him to send a waiter for his order, since he would fain break his fast in the privacy of his stateroom. And when the waiter came for the order, such was Mr. Webster's mental perturbation that his mind edged far furthest from his thoughts. He ordered a steak with French fried potatoes.

* * * * *

John Stuart Webster passed a restless night. Sleep came to him in hourly installments, from which he would rouse to ask himself whether it was worth while to continue to go through the motions of living, or alight at the next station, seek a lonely and unfrequented spot and there surrender to outrageous fortune. It was altogether damnable, in a careless moment, Fate had accorded him a glimpse of the only woman he had ever met and desired to meet again—for Webster was essentially a man's man, and his profession and environment had militated against his opportunities for meeting extraordinary women; and extraordinary women were the only kind that could long withstand his serious attention. Fate had accorded him a signal opportunity for knighty combat in the service of this extraordinary woman, and in the absence of a formal introduction, what man could desire a finer opportunity for getting acquainted? If only their meeting had not been delayed two weeks, ten days, a week! Once free of his ugly cocoon of rags and whiskers, the butterfly Webster would not have hesitated one brief instant to inform himself of that young lady's address, following his summary disposal of her tormentor.

But in all things there is a limit, and John Stuart Webster's right eye constituted a deadline beyond which, as a gentleman, he dared not venture; so with a heavy heart he bowed to the inevitable. Brilliant and mysterious as a meteorite she had flashed once across his horizon and was gone.

In the privacy of his stateroom Webster had ham and eggs for breakfast. He was lighting his second cigar when the porter knocked and entered with an envelope.

"Lady in the observation-car asked me to deliver this to you, sah," he announced importantly.

It was a note, freshly written on the train stationery. Webster read:

"The distressed lady desires to thank the gentleman in stateroom A for his chivalry of yesterday. She is profoundly sorry that in her surrice the gentleman in stateroom A was so unfortunate as to acquire a red eye with blue trimmings."

John Stuart Webster swore his mightiest oath, "By the twelve apostles, Simon Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Thomas, James, Jude and Simon, and not omitting Judas Iscariot, the scaly scoundrel who betrayed his Lord and Master!" He searched through an old wallet until he discovered a fairly clean professional card, across the bottom of which he wrote, "Thank you. J. S. W," and sent it to the no-longer-distressed lady.

"The most signal adventure of my life is now over," he soliloquized and turned to his cigar. "For the sake of my self-respect, I had to let her know I'm not a hobo! And now to the task of framing up a scheme for future acquaintance. I must learn her name and destination; so as a preliminary I'll interview the train conductor."

He did and under the ameliorating influence of a five-dollar bill the conductor bent a respectful ear to the Websterian message.

"In Car Seven," he began, "there is a young lady. I do not know what section she occupies neither do I know her name and destination. I only know what she looks like."

The conductor nodded. "And you want to ascertain her name and destination?"

"I do."

"All right. I have the unused portion of her transportation to return to her before we hit Salt Lake; her name is on the ticket and the ticket indicates her destination. I'll make a mental note of both as soon as I've identified her section."

A few hours later the conductor came to Webster's stateroom and handed him a card upon which was written:

"Dolores Ruey, From Los Angeles, via Death Valley, Los Angeles & Salt Lake, to Salt Lake City, Denver & Rio Grande to Denver, Burlington to St. Louis, Illinois Central to New Orleans. Stop-over at Denver."

John Stuart Webster studied the name after the conductor withdrew. "That's a Spanish name," he soliloquized, "but for all that, she's not a parakeet. All things considered, I guess I'll take a chance and investigate.

CHAPTER II.

Webster's dreams of bliss had, with very slight variation, come true as per schedule. In Salt Lake City he abandoned the bucketseak on his damaged eye for two businesslike leeches, which quickly reduced the nocturne effect with pills only, enabling him, the third day, to saunter forth among his fellowmen. By the end of the week he was a being rehicarnated, and so he packed a huge new wardrobe with the latest in purchases and journeyed on to Denver. Coincident with his arrival there, we again take up the thread of our story.

One hour after his trunk arrived the gentleman from Death Valley might have been observed standing before a cheval glass looking long and earnestly at the reflection of his middle-aged person, the while he marked the fit of his new raiment. John Stuart Webster was not displeased for the first time in three long, labor-ridden years, and was tremendously glad of it. He lighted a cigar and stepped forth into Seventeenth street, along which he sauntered until he came to a certain building into the elevator of which he entered and was whisked to the twelfth floor, where he alighted and found himself before a wide portal which bore in gold letters the words: "Engineers' Club."

The Engineers' club was the closest approach to a home that John Stuart Webster had known for twenty years, and save for the slight job of taxidermistry on Pacific Time had done on the edges of the close-cropped Websterian mustache, the returned prodigal might have stepped out of the club but yesterday. He would not have taken the chance of a modest bet that even a fresh log had been placed on the fire or that the domino-players over against the wall had won or lost a drink or two and then resumed playing—although perchance there were a few more gray hairs in the thickly thatched head of old Neddy Jerome, sitting in his favorite seat by the window and turning the cards in his eternal game of "solo for two" with ignorance that John Stuart Webster stood within the portals of home and awaited the fatted calf.

Webster struck the upholstery of an adjacent chair a terrific blow with his stick—the effect of which was to cause everybody in the room to start and to conceal Mr. Webster momentarily in a cloud of dust, the while in a bellowing baritone he sang:

"His father was a hard-rock miner,
He comes from my home town—"

"Jack Webster! The devil's own kin!" shouted Neddy Jerome. He swept the cards into a heap and sped across the room to meet the latest assailant of the peace and dignity of the Engineers' club. "You old, worthless, ornery, no-good son of a lizard! I've never been so glad to see a man that didn't owe me money. I've been combing the whole civilized world for you, for a month, at least. Where the devil have you been?"

John Stuart Webster beamed happily upon his friend. "Well, Neddy, you old stocking-knitter," he replied quizzically, "since that is the case, I'm not surprised at your failure to find me. You've known me long enough to have remembered to confine your search to the uncivilized reaches——"

"Well, you're here, at any rate and I'm happy. Now you settle down——"

"Hardly, Neddy. I'm young yet, you know—only forty. Still a real plunger and not quite ready to degenerate into a card-playing, eat-drink-and-be-merry, die-of-inanition, sink-to-oblivion and go-to-h—— fireplace sprite." Then he prodded Jerome in the short ribs with a tentative thumb that sunk the old man to his knees. He arose and his friend to drag him downstairs to the deserted lounge, where Jerome paused in the middle of the room and received his query:

"Where have you been, I ask?"

"Out in Death valley, California, trying to pry loose a fortune."

"Did you pry it?"

John Stuart Webster arched his eyebrows in mock reproach. "And you can see my new suit, Neddy, my sixteen-dollar, made-to-order shoes and my horny hoofs encased in silken hose —and ask that question? Freshly shaved and ironed and almost afraid to sit down and get wrinkles in my trousers? Smell that!" He blew a cloud of cigar smoke into Jerome's smiling face. The latter sniffed. "It smells expensive," he replied.

"Yes, and you can bet it tastes expensive, too." Webster answered, handing his cigar-case to his friend.

Jerome bit the end of his cigar and spat decisively. "How much have you made?" he demanded bluntly.

"It's none of your business, but I'll tell you because I love you, Neddy. I've made one hundred thousand dollars."

"Chicken-feed," Jerome retorted. "Johnny, I've been counting the mineral belt of North and South America for you for a month."

"Why this sudden belated interest in me?"

"I have a fine job for you, John—"

"King's X." Webster interrupted, and showed both hands with the fingers crossed. "No plotting against my peace and comfort, Neddy. Haven't I told you I'm all dressed up for the first time in three years, that I have money in my pocket and more in bank? Man, I'm going to tread the primrose path for a year before I get back into the harness again."

Jerome waved a deprecatory hand, impatiently brushing aside such feeble and inconsequential argument. "Are you foot-loose?" he demanded.

"I'm not. I'm bound in golden fetters—"

"Married, eh? Great Scott, I might have guessed it. So you're on your honeymoon, eh?"

"No such luck, you vichy-drinking conoclast. If you had ever gotten far enough from this club during the past fifteen years to get a breath of real fresh air, you'd understand why I want to enjoy civilization for a week or two before I go back to a mine superintendent's cabin on some bleak hill. No, sirree. Old Jeremiah Q. Work and I have had a falling out. Had burro your picture, Neddy, I want some class! I've been listening to a dago ditt-boss playing the accordeon for three years—and he could only play three tunes. Now I want Symphony band. I've been bathing in tepid, dirty water in a redwood sluice-box, and now I desire a steam room and a needle shower and an ostcopath. I've been tossing Greasers and Italians and was forced to learn their language to get results, and now I want to speak my mother tongue to my old friends. By thunder I'm going to have a new deal all around."

CLEARED UP MYSTERY.

Death of Police Officer Due to Heart Failure.

BRIDGEBURG, Ont., Dec. 25.—The coroner's jury at Ridgeway on Thursday evening brought in a verdict declaring Ontario Policeman John R. Smythe, of Fort Erie, died from heart failure, or shock, when the automobile which he was driving left the road and turned over in a ditch two miles from Ridgeway, on the night of December 9. Mrs. John Hare, Customs Officer A. N. Smith and Kenneth Millar, all of Fort Erie, testified that at various times Smythe had complained of his heart.

Dr. George E. Stewart, of Ridgeway who made the post-mortem examination, said that there was evidence of dilation of the cavities of the heart and that these conditions were sufficient to have caused death in the case of strain or excitement. Another witness testified that Smythe was thrown partly back over the front seat in a strained position. Dr. Stewart previously had said that there were no marks on the body which were sufficient to have caused death, and that the organs were normal. This caused the provincial authorities to send the stomach to Toronto for examination of the contents. This analysis, as previously reported, showed that there was no poison. The foul play theory was dismissed.

Roll Butter.

The young housekeeper who told the fishman that she wanted some eels and when he asked her how much, replied, "about two yards and a half," has a rival in a Hamilton woman.

"I wish to get some butter, please," she said to the dealer.

"Roll, butter, ma'am?" he asked, politely.

"No; we wish to eat it on toast. We seldom have rolls."

THE FEEDING OF LAMBS

How to Raise Sheep From Day of Birth.

Mother's Milk the Best Food—When and How to Feed Grain—Cause for Failure With Lambs—Reasons for Success.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Mother's milk is the first and best food for lambs. If this is not available, then the milk of goats or cows may be used. If the ewe or mother sheep has been well fed on oats, bran, clover and few roots for at least a month before the birth of the lamb, there is little likelihood of a milk shortage for one lamb. Lambs that have unkind mothers usually need some assistance to obtain nourishment. The mother sheep can be held by hand or tied with a halter while the lamb nurses. This is usually not necessary for more than one or three days. The transfer of lambs from one ewe to another can be made at birth or while the lamb is still very young by fooling the ewe, who by the way depends largely on the sense of smell to identify her offspring. Should a ewe have but one lamb, a day old, and it is desired to have her feed a second one, rub the two lambs together until they have the same smell and then test the ewe's ability to identify. If a ewe loses her lamb and it is desired to have her adopt and feed another one, such can be done by removing the skin from the dead lamb and placing such on the back of the lamb that it is desired she should adopt. This must, of course, be done in a comparatively short time; but cutting a slit in each corner of the pelt through which the legs of the living lamb may be passed, it is easy to keep the skin in place for a few days. Twin lambs frequently do not get sufficient milk for best development, and again the strong lamb will get more than its share. Close attention is necessary to make such adjustment as will insure the lambs getting a fair share. When lambs are not getting all the milk that they need from their mothers, provision should be made to supplement such by teaching the lambs to drink cows' milk from bottle or pan.

Grain Feeding.

When the lambs are two or three weeks old they will start nibbling at grain, hay or grass. At this time, they should be encouraged to feed by way of placing choice bits of fodder and grain in a small feed trough where they can reach it without being disturbed by the older sheep. Bran, ground oats, cracked corn and oil cake meal are very desirable concentrates for lambs. Fresh water and salt should always be available in the pens, yards or pasture. The amount of grain to feed will depend largely upon the use that it is desired to make of the lambs. Lambs for the best house lamb trade require liberal grain feeding, while those for breeding, or ordinary markets should be limited within the bounds of stable feeding. With lambs for exhibition, costs are sometimes of secondary importance, and the grain feeding is more liberal than it is with the lambs of the breeding or market type. Lambs that are grain fed from the beginning will reach market weight six or eight weeks earlier than those not receiving grain until the commencement of the fattening period. When grain feeding is too liberal either before or after weaning, the lambs will depend upon the grain feeds, and not eat as much grass or other roughage as it is keeping with profitable feeding. The amount of grain to feed must be determined by the age of the lamb, the purpose for which it is being reared, and the coarse feeds available. Grain feeding from the time that the lambs begin to feed is a profitable practice if the amount of grain fed per day does not reduce the lamb's appetite for grass and other coarse feeds. During the fattening period, the quantity of grain fed per lamb should generally not exceed one and a half pounds per day if the feeding is to be profitable. Good pasture grass, clovers, or rape should be supplied liberally to all lambs that are fed for the ordinary market or breeding. With hot house lambs, the excess food is limited, grain and milk are largely depended on for rapid gains.

Causes of Failure In Lamb Feeding.

1. Ewes not properly fed during pregnancy or after.
2. No supplementary feeds for the lambs.
3. Failure to properly dock and alter lambs.
4. No provisions against failure of pastures.
5. No protection from other stock.
6. Pastures infested with eggs or larvae of stomach worms.
7. Failure to dip and destroy ticks and lice.
8. Failure to clip wool from inner thighs and udder.
9. Using poor scrub stock.

Reasons for Success.

1. Proper care and liberal feeding to ewe and lamb.
2. Supplementary feeding ample.
3. Wool removed from vicinity of udder.
4. Ticks destroyed or prevented.
5. Using good vigorous stock of desirable type.
6. Ample supply of green forage.
7. Pastures and yards kept free of eggs or larvae of stomach worms injurious to sheep and lambs.
8. Protection provided against fly nuisance.
9. Docking and altering performed at proper time.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Use Beef Bullocks.

"A close study of the beef cattle feeding and market situation in Canada, and particularly in the Province of Ontario, reveals a few facts of economic importance to the beef cattle industry which we, as live stock farmers, cannot afford to overlook," state Messrs. G. W. Muir and S. H. Chapman of the Division of Animal Industry, in their introduction to Pamphlet No. 21, on the Winter Feeding of Beef Cattle in Ontario. It is hardly necessary to state that the pamphlet is a continuation of this series on the feeding and finishing of beef cattle, each covering a special section of the country now being issued by the experimental Farm Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Before going into the subject in detail, the pamphlet points out certain weak spots in the live stock industry with the object of bringing them home to farmers and breeders and with the idea of effecting improvement. These weak spots are six in number as follows: That the percentage of animals marketed between December and April, inclusive, is relatively small; that finished animals always demand a premium—particularly during the last and first four months of the year; that owing to poor breeding, poor rearing, or lack of finish—or a combination of all three — a large percentage of the steers marketed do not command top price nor hold the trade; that the Canadian public discriminates against frozen beef, which means that were the markets kept regularly supplied with fresh beef better prices would prevail; that relatively few export steers are sufficiently well finished for the trade, which indicates that proper finishing is necessary if this department is to prove profitable; that sufficient use of the beef bullock as a medium for the utilization of rough feeds is not made.

More Grain Through Vancouver.

November saw a new record established in the movement of Western Canadian grain through the port of Vancouver. Approximately 3,700,000 bushels, or considerably more than half of last year's total shipments, have passed through the local elevator during the month. December was another big month, about 4,000,000 bushels having moved from Vancouver for the United Kingdom and the Orient. Total grain booked and shipped of the 1922 crop, for the United Kingdom and the Orient, now amounts to about 10,000,000 bushels.

A Grade Worth While.

The grand champion grade dairy cow at the late National Dairy Show in the United States is credited with a production of 23,347 lbs. of milk containing 758.5 lbs. of butter-fat in a year. Although classed as a "grade," a picture of the cow given in the Ohio Farmer shows markings that warrant classing her, as a casual glance, as pure-bred Holstein.

STEAM HEAT UTILIZED

HOW TOBACCO IS CURED BY UP-TO-DATE METHOD.

Fuel Costs Proved Lower Than When the Furnaces Burned Wood, and the Use of Steam Also Eliminated the Hazard of Fire—Several Useful Experiments.

During the past season three barns of tobacco of the flue-cured type were cured on the Harrow Tobacco Station, with steam as a source of heat. The equipment consisted of a thirty horsepower high pressure steam boiler, a direct return steam trap, and a system of coils serving as radiators. Each coil consisted of six lengths of 1¼ inch black pipe sixteen feet long, connected by means of return bends.

The barn was equipped with thirteen of the above coils placed vertically on the floor and running lengthwise of the building at regular intervals. Each coil being connected to the steam mains by valves which rendered it possible to use a single coil or any number of the coils desired. The steam trap drew the condensed steam out of the coils and returned it to the boiler at a high temperature, thereby reducing fuel costs and adding to the efficiency of the system. While the results of one season's experiments hardly justify definite conclusions, says D. D. Digges, superintendent of the station, the following observations were made.

From the standpoint of quality, tobacco was cured just as satisfactorily with steam as with the old system.

Fuel costs with steam were lower than with furnaces burning wood. An average of two tons of soft coal was required per curing, while with the furnaces the average fuel consumption was 2½ cords of wood. However, a large quantity of coal was consumed in getting up steam for each curing; and if steam had been used in a series of barns either running singly or simultaneously a very appreciable saving in fuel would have been effected.

It is possible to cure satisfactorily with less than thirteen coils. However, by reducing the number of coils the fuel consumption was materially increased and the lower cost of installation would soon be more than offset by the increased fuel costs.

Steam gave a much more uniformly steady heat than either coal or wood burning furnaces, and the boiler required less attention than the furnaces, thereby saving labor.

The results indicated that two or three barns could be cured simultaneously with very little added cost for fuel. Using thirteen coils a temperature of 150 deg. F. could be maintained, with full ventilation with twenty pounds of steam; and 190 deg. F. with eighty pounds of steam, with the ventilation required for curing at that stage.

Fire hazard was eliminated by curing with steam.

All things considered, the cost of installation is the only real undesirable feature of the steam curing process. However, even that is not prohibitive when we take into consideration the very low cost of upkeep as compared with the cost of upkeep of the furnaces and galvanized iron flues of the old system; as well as the fact that on many farms the same boiler could be used for heating greenhouses, sterilizing tobacco beds, steaming tobacco into case and a variety of purposes. Moreover, good second hand boilers which would serve the purpose admirably can frequently be purchased very reasonably.

It is estimated that a good thirty horsepower boiler will handle four, and possibly five, five run curing barns of tobacco simultaneously.

Saskatchewan's Crops.

Almost half of the cultivated land of Saskatchewan was put into wheat in 1921, states the professor of Field Husbandry of the Provincial University, and almost a fourth of it sown to oats. The remaining fourth, or a little more, was occupied by barley, flax, rye and summer fallow in the main, although in wildly scattered patches we can find the beginnings of a new agriculture in fields of corn, sweet clover, sunflower and alfalfa.

RECLAIMING GULLIES.

Methods Recommended for Increasing Acreage of Farm.

Gullies are a source of great loss to the farmer. They ruin fertile land, interfere with farm operations, undermine buildings, encroach on public roads, endanger the life of stock and mar the beauty and lower the market value of the farm. They can be prevented by increasing the absorptive capacity of the soil by tilling, protecting the surface from erosion by proper cultivation, and by conducting the surplus water from the field at a low velocity. Gullies can be reclaimed by ploughing-in and seeding to grass or timber, or by building soil-saving dams that check erosion and cause the filling of the gully with silt.

In checking gullying, the first thing is to stop it at the head. If possible, the water should be turned into a natural water-course before it reaches the head of the gully. In shallow gullies, a dam built close to the head will give a fill of soil in a short time. In deeper gullies, a longer time is necessary according to the condition and amount of washing. Brush and straw, firmly fastened down, make a good dam for stopping erosion.

In regions where timber and brush are plentiful good results in filling gullies have been obtained by the use of brush dams. In hill-side gullies where the flow of water is small the dams are commonly built of loose brush sometimes weighted down with logs. Where the flow is enough to overtop the dam, the brush can be held down by conspicuous end stakes. Simply dumping the brush into a gully will not give good results.

Before beginning to reclaim a gully with soil-saving dams, the entire work of reclamation should be planned. If only a part of the work is planned it may not fit into the complete reclamation job which will be undertaken later. After the head dam is in place and erosion checked, a number of low, temporary dams can be used in a wide, shallow depression that will gradually fill. If the gully ends in the side of a deep drainage channel, the lower end must be built up with a high dam. The higher the dams the fewer will be required, but several low dams are less costly than one high one and more easily constructed. A low dam also requires less care and attention than a high dam.

Potatoes In Tobacco Barns.

In sweet potato areas in tobacco territory, farmers who grow both crops can save in building equipment by using their flue-heated tobacco barns for the storage of potatoes. Many farmers who do not raise a large acreage of sweet potatoes find that the expense of a special storage structure is not justified, although through the use of pits, banks, or cellars they have been losing a large part of the stored crop. But if some building which serves another important purpose can be remodeled so as to meet both needs a greater part of the sweet potatoes produced can be saved at a small outlay of money. On farms which have flue-heated tobacco barns or similar buildings that serve their main purpose before the potato harvest, this saving is practical.

WELCOME, WINTRY WINDS?

What did you do with your summer's dough?
It's gone; and you hate to tell.
Soon we'll have both hail and snow,
It sure would make one yell.
But I we should worry! let it come,
The wintry winds we'll greet,
For we were shod at the Hospital
And we shall have dry feet.
Hog! Dog! nor devil, do we fear,
For our understanding's good;
Our sox are dry, our feet are glad,
We did as wise fool's should.

HOCKEY RESULTS, BAY OF QUINTE LEAGUE

Napanee played their first game in the Quinte League at Belleville on Friday last, loosing to the 34th Battery Team, which represents Belleville in the League, by a score of 9 to 4.

The game started off by Napanee securing the puck and rushing it into Belleville's danger zone, but not for long. D. Whalen, the fast wing man of Belleville, got the puck and by a zig zag rush went the whole length of the ice and shot at Vanalstine, who was able to deal with the shot.

After these two sensational rushes the game settled down to real fast hockey. Belleville certainly outclassed the locals with speed and combination, but the locals made up for this by the wonderful back-checking, which saved many more goals at many critical moments.

Belleville truly have a good team. Finkle on defence made rush after rush into Napanee's zone and was very conspicuous throughout the game for his fast playing. The Whalen brothers also showed up good, and these three were easily the stars for Belleville.

Mr. Smith played good hockey. His unselfish rushes, his back-checking and hard work made him the local star man.

Huffman and Schermerhorn also showed the Belleville fans that with another week's condition they will be men who will need close watching.

By this score do not get the idea that the locals are not in the run, for they are, and with Leon Spencer back for next week, you will have the chance of seeing two league games in your own arena.

Napanee's new uniforms looked fine. The old red and white colors have been discarded for blue and white.

After the game Major Bob Graham and his battery entertained the locals by giving them an oyster supper at their headquarters.

The game on the whole was clean, Belleville drawing five penalties, which were minor ones.

Belleville—Goal, Hibbard; defense, Finkle and Canning; centre, T. Whalen; wings, Symons and D. Whalen; Subs. Armstrong and Gayer.

Napanee — Goal, Vanalstine; defense, Caldwell and Loucks; centre, Smith; wings, Spencer and Huffman; subs, Schermerhorn and McLaughlin; sub goaler, Babcock; referee, Mr. Barrett.

THE NEWER WAY

"Business is War," is an old saying. It might have been true at one time. That it is not true to-day as a rule is a certainty.

In those days the store-keeper got the best price he possibly could out of the customer and the good salesman was the man who sold the customer what the customer did not want.

Years ago The Management of this business realized that the fairest way to conduct a store was to have "One" price on each and every line of merchandise carried. Thus to-day customers know that when they shop at our store they are getting absolutely the "best" price that anyone can get. With us you are guaranteed price protection whether you shop in person or order your requirements by Mail or Telephone.
